FOREWORD

This book presents a new vision in the form of an ideology that brings people of various countries, cultures, religions and beliefs together in one shared purpose – to become free from the domination of global financial corporations. From birth we are told what to do. “You must” is the mantra we are told we should live by, but in fact it’s just other people’s thoughts that force us to the life of their choosing. Taking their position of “I must” we choose a life for someone or something else, not for ourselves.

“My purpose” – that is what we are really after and what we believe we want when we are honest with ourselves. “My purpose” can only occur when we cease to follow someone else’s ideals and head toward our own. Only in this case we will discover our personal potential. This “My purpose” has become the global aim for the leader of the international movement) – Aleksey Muratov. “My purpose” is to change the world, which is ruled by the elite of the world financial empire. They are always ready to start wars, organize revolutions and drive common people into “slavery” for the sake of their own greed and monopoly.

However, Aleksey is well aware that improving or implementing anything new without knowledge or experience is a hit-and-miss gamble. Aleksey Muratov realized that he did not want to live like most people do. At a young age he worked as a leading engineer at the Kursk nuclear power station of and was a leader of the youth movement. By the age of 25 he had become the youngest deputy chairman of the City Duma to the Chairman of the permanent commission on economic policy. This was not unconnected; he had a dream to help the people of his city! Soon it came to him: one couldn’t change people’s lives in a city, region or country for the better unless the state had sovereignty, unless it had full independence in its internal affairs and foreign policy. Unfortunately, most countries of the world do not have that sovereignty. So the desire to rid society of the negative movement's ideology.

One cannot win if the rules are constantly being changed for the benefit of who making the changes. The rules must be the same for all participants. Aleksey Muratov tried to implement this idea by participating in Sergey Mavrodi's infamous project .Aleksey was engaged in the creation of political parties outside Russia. It should be noted that this was his first experience with an association of people from different countries, different cultures and religions, who desired to change the rules imposed on them. However, when the Ukrainian legitimate government was overthrown in Ukraine with the help of the world's financial elite and the pro-Western puppets, Aleksey considered it his duty to come to Donbass.

He realized that the background of that conflict was not a national idea by the Ukrainian people, not a desire to enter the European Union but a threat from international corporations to start third world war. This would prevent Russia from further development and stop it from becoming a new superpower. That spring Aleksey Muratov became an official representative of the Donetsk People's Republic, after its proclamation, in Russia. He became an active participant in the creation of a new ideology, which would unite the inhabitants of Donbass. As the head of the Executive Committee, he is engaged in the development of the – the most widespread one in the Donetsk People's Republic. After that he started to working at the Central Office of the People's Council (Parliament) of the DPR and Aleksey created its structure. He took the work to a new level and built relationships with his colleagues from the Russian Federation. Despite the successful nation-building work in the young Republic, Aleksey Muratov kept his dream to create a new international movement. The political experience he gained became a strong background for this movement and the formation of a new international association.

Thus, the Ministry of Justice of the Russian Federation

• THE WORLD TODAY

The Earth and humankind are being held hostage to the political and financial system. This system protects the interest of financial elites and is bitterly unfair towards people and destructive towards nature. This system is based on the colonization and exploitation of people, states, energy, minerals and technologies. The way global capital is being exploited is at the root of religious conflicts between people and communities. For centuries the financial system has been taken control of the world's resources and markets, and influenced governments, mass media, education, medicine and even our food supply. A few of the world's richest families and their corporations exert direct control over the scope of all major human activity. How could this happen? To answer this question let's turn to history.

The history of money extends back over thousands of years. At the dawn of the human civilization, when there was no money, only hard work could give you clothing, shelter and food. Over time the main human occupations (gathering and hunting) moved to the next level and our ancestors could raise cattle and grow their own food. As a result, a surplus of goods and produce started to appear.

A tribe which had a large number of animal skins but short of grain could exchange with another tribe that had a surplus of grain. This is how bartering started. As humans developed, the barter also developed and covered an even greater number of goods and services.

The most famous example of bartering in human history is the bargain of Peter Minuit in 1626. For trinkets and beads costing $24 he obtained the island of Manhattan. In 1993 the island was valued at $50 billion.

Gradually people realized that carrying a bag of wheat or dozens of skins for exchange was not very convenient. By trial and error humans began using silver and gold as an equivalent for exchange. Gold and silver could not be faked or spoil, so they served as money for a long time.

Jewelers began minting gold and silver coins. They needed a reliable storage for gold and silver ushering in the first safes. Soon, traders and the general population began to rent space in the jewelers safes to store their coins and valuables. So, long before credit existed jewelers began to lease shelves in their safes earning income from that business.

Years later one jeweler began to understand that people never came for their gold all at once. This occurs because people were holding onto obligatory bills given by the jeweler as a proof of the stored gold. These bills were considered real money in the market instead of the gold as it was more convenient and easy to exchange. Sellers of goods accepted them as receipts for payment of goods. Borrowers began to take loans in this paper form instead of real gold.

The jeweler came up with another business – he started to lend his gold at an interest. He used his own and the stored gold of the merchants and townspeople, who kept it for safekeeping. But since everyone never come at the same time, this business grew rapidly. The ability to give loans was limited only by the amount of gold in the safe. Then the bankers came up with an even more daring idea. Since they were the only ones who knew how much gold was in the safe they could issue obligatory bills for gold that they did not have. If all the investors would never come at the same time to collect, then who would find out? They figured out how to make money out of thin air. This was the origin of the phrase “to make money out of thin air”. Jewelers who realized how to make money out of thin air are today’s bankers.

That principle became the ground of the existing financial system that began to take shape about 400 years ago. Bankers began to lend to governments, who used that money to wage wars of conquest, and to merchants, who conducted “business” by exploiting new territories. Since the governments depended on the banks’s money, they not only allowed them to make money out of thin air but also legitimized this process by skewing the ratio making it 9 to 1. Today this is called a “fractional reserve” system.

Today this works in most of the worlds banks and accepted as a part of the banking philosophy. For example, if you deposit $1000 into an account, the bank can then turn around and lend someone else $10,000 in the form of credit based on this fractional reserve system – legally creating money out of thin air.

State fraud

The first major state endorsement of this financial fraud was the Bank of England in 1694. That institution was as a result of the so-called transaction between a nearly bankrupt government and a group of financiers. The bank was private and so the state gave it the official title and the right to issue money. The King of England was in great need of money for the war with France and willingly agreed to give the bankers this national title and get the loans he needed.

In the 1690s the banking system of England included lending bankers, who provided loans out of borrowed funds, and jewelers receiving gold for deposits and extending loans as well. Bankers realized that the power over money might well result in unlimited opportunities. In a couple of centuries the British Empire became a leading world power due to the relentless colonization of other peoples and continents.

In 1913 the next leader emerged surpassing the Bank of England in the scale and scope of using this fraudulent system. This was the Federal Reserve (FRS) of the United States. But the Federal Reserve was not a governmental organization. It was a private enterprise made up of bankers, a joint stock company established by 12 Federal Reserve banks, which in turn had been created by commercial banks. The FRS operates as a private bank. The US government issues bonds to procure the “national currency” and the FRS prints bank notes and lends them to the state through the sale of the bonds. The state buys the bonds and the money returns to the FRS with interest.

Thus, the main objective of the FRS was its income through seignior age – the difference between the face value of the bank notes and the cost of their production. For example, if a hundred dollar banknote costs 10 cents to make, the seigniorage will be 99 dollars 90 cents. Like the Bank of England, the FRS is not part of the state.

The third US President Thomas Jefferson (1772—1782) said: “Banking institutions are more dangerous to our liberties than standing armies. If the American people ever allow private banks to control the issue of their currency, first by inflation, then by deflation, the banks and corporations that will develop around them will deprive the people of all property until their children wake up homeless in the country their fathers built”.

Deception, fraud and racketeering are the modus operandi of the bankers. You’ve heard of names like Rothschild and Rockefeller. What do they have in common? They both became rich and powerful using these unfair and corrupt methods and the law never stopped them as they achieved their goals.

During the great Anglo-French battle of Waterloo in 1815 the London Stock Exchange was thrown into disorder. If Napoleon won, the market would be ruined, but if he lost, the market would be enriched. Rothschild saw this battle as an opportunity to make a fortune for himself. Using messenger pigeons and signals from boats along the English Channel he was the first to learn that Napoleon lost. He quickly spread false information that Napoleon had won to the London Stock Exchange. He started selling his shares with others following him and the price of securities went spiraling downward. Rothschild and his partners, knowing that England had actually won, bought all the shares for a pittance. A day later, when the London Stock Exchange learnt about the victory of England, those shares skyrocketed and were worth a fortune. Nathan Rothschild earned 40 million pounds on this information flip. This fraud went down in history as one of many examples showing the impropriety bankers and their principles.

Rothschild Rockefeller

Rothschild was a great deceiver, however Rockefeller often used openly criminal methods for doing business ruining the businesses of his competitors. His criminal infamy reached such a level that mothers used his name to frighten their misbehaving children.

The ability to print money without constraint is the dream of any financier allowing him or her to print as much he desires. This large supply of money was used to seize the treasures and resources of others from around the world. Millions were robbed of the opportunity to share the wealth of the world. The Federal Reserve engaged in the bribing of politicians, the take-over of competition and the buying of entire governments in order to strengthen its position. And in order to protect its position it financed the world's strongest army, that of the United States of America.

What does an ambitious entrepreneur do if he can obtain a surplus of money? He expands his business. And that is what the bankers did. In order to increase their earnings they began to give out loans. This also began to happen on a governmental level giving out massive loans to build up armies through the sale of arms and pitting one country against the other. This led to the destruction of countries, which gave the banks the opportunity to turn around and begin giving loans for the rebuilding of these countries, and the cycle repeated itself. The First and Second World Wars were examples of this scenario.

Shortly after the FRS was established, the First World War began. It culminated in the collapse of two currencies secured with gold – the Russian ruble and the German mark. However, many American businessmen opposed the bankers and realized the real motives of the financial robber barons. In 1929 the Great Depression began. The discount rate of the FRS suddenly increased and almost half the money supply was withdrawn from the economy making the credit cost skyrocket.

Companies that relied on credit went bankrupt and the regular investors' lives were ruined by the gratuitous consumer loans. Securities were not worth a penny and millions people became unemployed and idle. Some people flaunt the idea that during the depression in the United States all of the country's assets were lost. But this is not what happened, when someone loses value – another receives it. The well-kept secret is who had bought those assets. Those who control the FRS bought them, the same people who organized the economic depression with the help of the FRS.

In 1932 Franklin Delano Roosevelt was elected president of the US. He began “fighting the crisis”. US citizens were barred from possessing precious metals and had to hand them over to the authorized banks, or the owner would face a prison sentence. Soon after the expropriation the price of gold went up significantly.

At the same time American industry was being procured by the bank clans and the FRS. This was not only about saving American industry.

Not everybody kept silent, congressman and banker from Pennsylvania, Louis McFadden, gave a famous speech that exposed the Great Depression. In a highlight he said: “It was no accident. It was a carefully contrived occurrence. The International Bankers sought to bring about a condition of despair here so they might emerge as the rulers of us all”. In 1936 the politician suddenly died at the age of 50.

World War II made the United States the world's richest country. Investments in the construction plans of the Third Reich were successful. The list of American backers of Hitler included names like Rockefeller and Morgan. In the summer of 1929, at a special meeting of bankers, representatives of the Morgan Financial and industrial group acknowledged the need to support the German Nazi movement.

At the end of the war, in 1944, all States signed the Bretton Woods agreement, which made the dollar the only legitimate global reserve currency. Since 1944 these green papers, printed by a private organization and unsecured, were supposed to be used for all the settlements and storage of foreign-exchange reserves. However, the US suddenly experienced problems.

The young and charismatic president John Fitzgerald Kennedy – a representative of a large Irish clan – started a crusade against the FRS. In his speech about the “secret societies” the president called for the construction of an alternative power system. The Government began emission of banknotes, secured with precious metals through the Ministry of Finance, under the presidential decree

No. 11110. Those dollars were endorsed under the name “United States Note” not “Federal Reserve Note”. That is they were reprinted and endorsed by the State, not a private entity. They were secure.

Six months later Kennedy was killed. Then his brother Robert was also killed. Some believe for knowing more than he should. The Kennedy rebellion was suppressed. Banknotes were withdrawn. Now the two- and five-dollar bills of 1963 are rare.

As president, John Kennedy felt like a puppet of the FRS, and he did not like it. Thus, Kennedy fought for the interests of the American people and actually tried to make a coup d’etat from above.

There remained a detail that got in the way of the banker’s ultimate objective. This was the problem of Bretton Woods and the issuing of money. Remember that money had a gold equivalent and could be exchanged for gold under the Bretton Woods agreement at any time. However, the bankers had printed one thousand times the amount money than they had gold in stock. But the bankers were legally obliged to make such an exchange if demanded. If all the bank customers came at the same time requiring the exchange of money for gold, their system would collapse there and then.

So they decided to change this obstructive law with the help of the then president of the US, Richard Nixon. He implemented a series of economic reforms in 1971 known as the “Nixon shock”. The most significant reform was the refusal of the US to secure the dollar rate with a gold equivalent, which resulted in a virtual collapse of the Bretton Woods system. The bankers were now free to produce as much paper money as they needed. Money truly became paper, as the Nixon decision gave the dollar note a value which was not backed by anything.

The way to organize and control crisis

The same banking system caused the mortgage crisis of 2007—2008, which gave hundreds of thousands of US households to the banks. A huge number of Americans were unable to pay their financial obligations to the bank. The banks took the debtors’ houses and put them up for sale. Why had lots of Americans suddenly become insolvent? The reason is that the creditors gave loans to questionable borrowers who defaulted on these loans.

This play started in 2001, the bankers began to give money to all takers. They were considerable amounts, as it was for real estate purchases. Some banks offered loans with a floating interest rate, adjusted yearly from the start of the third year. At the beginning the rate was unusually low. Others advertised loans that pushed even the first payment for a new house into the future. No first payment or security was needed.

The seductive conditions that they offered Americans were tempting to those who were not even considering buying real estate. Everybody began to take loans trying to improve their living conditions. People, who had no money, took out loans from institutions, who also had no money but borrowed and raised the funds in order to loan them out under this scheme.

One debt caused another one, debt was everywhere. But the system of selling debt had its industrial logic. The sale of mortgage bonds and loans was performed like this: the rating agencies assessed the degree of credit non-repayment risk and depending on that degree, the securities had various degrees of “freshness”. Extra Grade and Grade I were more expensive but had less risk and found their buyers quickly. However, second and third grade ratings were also quite popular. The price of the risky mortgage “package” was low and had a large demand.

Everybody was satisfied. Banks ended contracts with private persons, got its money from investors and could start the affair again. Investors had invested and were waiting for profits as skeptical yet willing customers could apply for loans again.

The hilarity of the situation was that investors, or speculators, who bought cheap “second-rate” mortgage obligations on the so called scientific basis propagated by rating agencies divided them into more grades. This time the “highest grade” (reliability rating) was not the best of the best but the best of the worst.

This went on for 6—7 years! The US economy was growing, GDP was increasing, everyone was happy. Many people were not only kept occupied but also made large amounts of money, but produced nothing. This debt pyramid was supported with constant growth of real estate prices, which enabled attraction of new players with new financial resources to the housing and mortgage market.

Banks, major reputable companies with many years or even a century or two of operation started the same game, let’s call it “give everybody as much of your money as you can”. This resulted in filled postal boxes but no prospectuses of some productive and beneficial business opportunity, only thick envelopes with bank contracts. Each envelope contained a credit card. Its activation required nothing. Just take it and start to buy, the agreement was straightforward and endorsed by the bank. “Real” money has been sent out by mail, carelessly, to everyone en masse.

The logic of this mailing system was straightforward: mass non-payment of debt on credit cards. The USFRS data stated the cumulative “plastic debt” of Americans amounting to approximately $950 billion at the beginning, the rate of nonperforming card loans increased from 4.61% to 6.82% from August 2007 to August 2008 which is a growth amounting to a 48% increase. Withdrawals from credit cards during the period of unemployment be truly of historic proportions. The existing policy had become impossible as the credit system with its low lending rate had made large, that their re-payment was impossible. The consequences of the US bank games were made visible for all to see.

This brings to mind the statement that US President Woodrow Wilson once said: “We have come to be one of the worst ruled, one of the most completely controlled and dominated governments in the civilized world – no longer a government by free opinion, no longer a government by conviction and the vote of the majority, but a government ruled by the opinion and the duress of a small group of dominant men”.

His statement is not only meant for the US. The Arabs traded oil for dollars, the Germans sold machines and equipment for marks (having eliminated the Euro), the Chinese manufactured for yuan. Until today no one seems ready to fight against this system in the United States, although everyone understands that the FRS is robbing the world creating virtual money at the expense of our benefit and instead of legitimate material resources.

Key areas of life and forms of control

It has become common knowledge that the world's elite and the bankers profit and benefit from the crises that befall ordinary populations around the world.

How else do they implement their control and plans on populations? This is a product of their control on the world's energy reserves, food supplies, health systems, education and social media. One can even argue that the scientific establishment colludes with these sponsors as they are the benefactors for their research.

• Energy and oil

The dependence of humankind on oil & gas and coal corporations ensures massive profits for those at the top of the financial system. The group of energy companies led by BP, Chevron, ExxonMobil and Royal Dutch Shell and the OPEC cartel and national oil producers control about 88% of the worlds energy reserves and its production and sale. Do you think they want to see the petrol driven car replaced with the electric car?

This is one of the reasons that alternative energy sources are yet to become mainstream and replace the destructive use of fossil fuels. There is a strong incentive for those driven by profit to continue the dependence on oil for as long as possible disregarding the effect this has on the environment. Free energy will put these corporations out of business and therefore it is a matter of survival for them to fight this change, even if it puts the survival of our ecosystem in jeopardy. Petrodollars are at the root of power in today's world.

Food products

Derivative of oil are being used in many of the world's vital products. In the agriculture sector they are used for fertilizers and herbicides to control food production.

Agriculture has paid large sums to the Oil and Gas giants through the purchase of these products. But when you realize that the same bankers are behind Big Agriculture as well as Big Oil then the picture becomes clearer. Governments pay billions of dollars in subsidies to these companies and yet their promise to end hunger has fallen short, very short.

Toxic chemicals are poisoning people and wildlife polluting soil and water and producing harmful food that poses a serious threat to our health.

Monsanto, DuPont, Cargill, ADM, Glencore are the global agriculture giants. They produce genetically modified products at the seed level creating all sorts of undefined complications to the human body. This unnecessary invasion on the human body is destroying our immune systems and the rise of cancer rates around the world is a case in point. We have also seen a rise in infertility which scientists believe is related to these modified products.

Not only are these corporations ruining our health by degrading our food supply, they are also destroying the livelihood of the farmers that would otherwise supply us with natural organic produce. The farmers cannot compete with the corporate giants and are forced to purchase the modified seeds to survive. These seeds can only be planted once and will not produce more seeds as per the natural cycle. The seed has been modified and made sterile, so the farmer returns to buy more from the corporations. This is how the profit incentive has colonized and exploited our food supply.

So, two key areas, energy and food, are controlled by the same elite banking families and the corporations that represent them. The destruction is obvious today as the geopolitical wars driven by resource shortages wage on, and the GMO debacle still continues unabated. But that's not all the trouble.

Medicine

Medicine is also under the control of these international bankers and their corporations. The health system has been controlled by a network of pharmaceutical companies who have strong incentive to produce and sell as many drugs as possible. It's how they succeed in the financial system. They fund medical education, medical studies and results are always in their favor, not for the benefit of those who need the health care. Doctors profit from selling specific medicines and they are trained at the expense of Big Pharma companies. Medicine seems to be designed not to eliminate the disease but only to relieve the symptoms and prolong the disease so more medicine can be sold.

The pharmaceutical industry controls our society. Its interests control medical researches and make all professions related to health care dependent on it. Pharmaceutical companies manipulate the law and mass media in order to preserve and protect their dominant position. Mass-media large-scale advertising campaigns create a “smokescreen” and hide the true interests of the pharmaceutical industry.

The advertising statements of pharmaceutical industry falsely claim the destruction of infectious diseases. In fact, the most important therapeutic drugs, such as penicillin and other antibiotics, were invented in institutions funded by government.

The pharmaceutical industry is also trying to prevent the dissemination of information about vitamins, knowing that, in this case, the life time of millions people will be extended for several decades.

Revenues of pharmaceutical companies over the past 25 years exceeded the revenues of all the other industries on average by 500%. In other words, the disease business is the most profitable business in the world and millions of people pay the bills directly or indirectly. What should we do?

The most important way to change the situation is that we should not only reveal but also to participate in the creation of a new health care system. Healthy aging should be the rule rather than the exception.

and others carry out a lot of scientific investigations, but they are not transparent about the extent of these investigations. There is strong evidence that pharmaceutical companies are creating some of the diseases that they also create cures for, all in the name of more profit. They invest in the future by creating the problem and the solution simultaneously. Are they using human beings for their experiments? Are they engaged in the sterilization of people through their questionable vaccines? We already know that they are creating biological weapons for warfare, commissioned by the military-industrial complex, and all underwritten and controlled by the same bankers. This puts all of the medical industry in question on whether it is really benefiting humankind at all.

We see the systematic legalization of harmful drugs and chemical psychotropic substances all over the world. Children are being subscribed harmful substances for fictitious diseases. Do you still think that the power players value the health of the human populace?

Science and education

Science and education is also under the control of the financial system today. What do bankers and their corporations want from schools? They want to indoctrinate our minds from the start to produce an obedient and docile work force which is easily controlled. The school follows curriculums set by authorities and keep us bound to the system for many years until we become submissive to this hierarchical system.

It is apparent that the bankers do not want to see an educated populace. The quality of public education has been steadily declining and the ability of people to think differently has been stunted. It is much harder to control a man or a woman who thinks critically and can look at things from different perspectives. They want us to turn into robots who obey and consume on demand.

The scientific establishment has also been subjugated to the will of these elites. The funding of science has been primarily channeled into areas that do not create the most value for humankind. This is evident in the slow adoption of the renewables industry and other sectors such as transportation, education and health. The unlimited capital at the control of the few has been set against the benefits of the many.

Do you want to live in such a world?

People's main purpose under this system is to survive, not prosper. It has become a modern form of slavery driven by the financial elite. They've created a system to control people's minds. We work to pay back debts, loans with high interest and to afford to send our children to schools. All this is for the benefit of a few and their exorbitant life styles.

This system looks like a pyramid separated into divisions with ordinary people making up the bottom level. This is the economic term of the "bottom of the pyramid" where most of those living in poverty are categorized.

The next level is where we have government workers and those that benefit at the expense of the masses through tax collection. At the next level we have the corporations who influence government and control much of our social behaviour. The next level is where the big banks and various finance institutions sit and is run by the financial elite that control the corporations. At the high tip of the pyramid are the 300 richest families that influence and control all that is below them.

Researchers from Zurich have analyzed the data of 40 million companies from 200 countries around the world and came to a disappointing conclusion. About 80% of all the global funds and companies are concentrated within 150 transnational corporations (TNCs) consisting of banks, investment funds and insurance companies that are controlled by a very small group of people.

Many experts believe that a world government is already acting through the institutions it has created: the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the World Health Organization, and the World Trade Organization lead the list. They believe that a totalitarian world power is being formed, a military dictatorship led by a fringe elite – possessing everything and setting all the rules. We can already see this elite seeking to control access to almost all the resources we need to live.

One of the goals of this clandestine organization is to create what is known as the “golden billion”. This golden billion includes 24 countries that represent the “worthiest of the developed” nations. About 900 million people from these countries have been assigned the role of service and mining and the other 6 billion people are classified as “unnecessary” and systematically destroyed by the means of harmful substances, viruses, wars and government injustice.

The story of the disadvantaged people

In most of the cities in India people live in slums and cardboard boxes on the streets. They work as servants for the wealthy people or hold low-wage jobs. These are the “disadvantaged people” perceived by the rest of the world as the people in need. More affluent citizens pass these slums on their way to and from work and try to ignore the situation and plight of these disadvantaged people. The people in need themselves have become resigned to their predicament and accept it as their destiny. Most of them do not consider it necessary to change these conditions. It makes no sense for them to fight the unfair conditions they were born into. When we look at disadvantaged people, we consider ourselves successful and lucky by comparison. After all, we live in comfortable conditions, receive good education and many of us have prestigious high paying jobs. We have loved ones around us and we feel that we have advantages in life. However, we are also “disadvantaged people” for those who live better than we do, compared to the world’s financial elite. For them we are also second-class citizens who live pitiful lives while they spend fortunes on extravagant luxury.

There is an obvious injustice that exists, we understand that we are being manipulated and deceived. Our hard work is used to get the wealthiest of us even richer and we must be content with little.

What have we done to change this? Almost nothing. This unjust world will be passed on to our children and grandchildren and they will continue to live in the same way as we do.

Generations and generations will replace each other without changing anything. But is this right? No!

I suggest stopping this cycle of injustice in the world and to change our lives for the better with Change the World Together!

Money and authority have merged under this corrupt system. Their power stems from this unity, a secret held by those in power since time immemorial. Those in power follow the “divide et impera” or divide and rule principle. This allows them continue their control by wearing down the forces that try and hamper their plans. The problems we face today are a result of our inaction. Taking the “waitand-see” approach we enable these controllers to define our future and the future of our children. Change will not come by itself. We must combine our efforts.

If we unite we can do much more, together we can change the world!

DOLLAR AND POLITICS

It is clear that these “bubbles” and the buying up of the world for dollars has given the world’s elite almost unlimited financial and administrative power and resources. This will continue as the world plays by the rules of these robber barrons.

Charles de Gaulle — the first knight for humanity against the dollar in the 20th century

The US wishes for sole control over the global foreign exchange market was transmitted to all the countries during the Second World War. In April 1943 American experts launched the global monetary system scheme. World War II was in full swing. Great Britain, the Soviet Union and other participants in the anti-Hitler coalition had to pay America gold for delivery of arms, machinery, metals and food. Conventional bank notes were worth almost nothing in wartime. The dollar had become the equivalent of precious metals and the gold standard was pegged on y to the dollar. Here are some figures: The gold reserve of the United States was 13,000 tons in 1938, 17,700 tons in 1945, 21,800 tons in 1949. That was 70% of the world gold reserve at that time.

On February 4th, 1965 the President of France, Charles de Gaulle, told journalists at his regular briefing at the Elysee Palace: “Truly it is hard to imagine any standard other than gold. The international exchange has the highest law, the golden rule, which is to be restored. It is an obligation to provide balance of payments for various currencies by actual revenue and expenditure of gold”.

After the creator of the Fifth Republic stopped talking, the press representatives rushed out of the hall to nearby telephone sets. Everyone understood that a war had been officially declared – a war against the US dollar. De Gaulle proposed that the postwar world financial redistribution in favor of the dollar as the main currency not be accepted. He called back to the international payments system effective before the World Wars. In other words, he proposed to bring back the classical gold standard where any currency had real value and was literally worth that value in gold. De Gaulle did not intend to bring back the gold standard, which would ensure the stability of the global financial system. Quite the contrary, he was proposing a return to the role of gold as the general equivalent. Americans were torn between the Vietnam War and problems in the Caribbean, they hoped that the anti-dollar rhetoric of the French leader would remain just words. However, it did not go that way.

A secret report by famous economists Robert Triffin and Jacques Rueff, prepared in 1959, informed General De Gaulle that the forced participation of France in the so-called “Gold Pool” was ruining the economy. The international structure of the central banks of seven Western European countries under the auspices of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, which included France, were acting through the Bank of England. It was not only keeping the international price of gold at $35 per ounce (one ounce is equal to approximately 31 grams) for the convenience of Washington but was also trading the gold for their benefit and reporting monthly to the US financial authorities. If they had to increase the selling volume of the metal, the pool participants gave the Americans the gold from their reserves. If the pool bought more than sold, the difference was shared at a humiliating ratio: half was given to the Americans, half to the others. France had 9%. Experts reported to de Gaulle that the activities of the Gold Pool had caused over $3 billion in loss to the Europeans. General de Gaulle knew he irritated the US government, particularly after France had accelerated development of its own nuclear weapons program in the early 1960s. In January of 1963 De Gaulle rejected the “multilateral nuclear force” created by the Pentagon and he took back the control of the Atlantic fleet of France from NATO. By that time only two French divisions remained under the American command instead of the fourteen that were agreed on. However, the Americans never guessed that this was just the beginning. In 1965 De Gaulle formally proposed to his American counterpart Lyndon Johnson 1.5 billion dollars in cash from the French state reserves to be exchanged for gold. Washington responded that the US would regard such an action by France as unfriendly and would have consequences. “Politics is too serious a matter to be left to the politicians”, – retorted the general and announced that France was walking out on

NATO

In spring of 1965 a French ship anchored in New York harbor. It was not a combat vessel, but it had a weapon with which Paris intended to win the financial battle with the United States. The French ship had brought bank notes to the value of 750 million dollar to the United States in order to exchange them for “real money”, that is for gold. That was the first tranche payment to the Federal Reserve System. “All the formalities are met. The representative of the Bank of France is ready to provide half of the said amount to the US Treasury. The money is here”, – read the official dispatch from Paris to Washington. Exchange under the rules of the Gold Pool could only be made to the US Treasury. The hull of the first French “money” ship was waiting to unload the 750 million dollars. At an exchange rate of 1.1 grams of gold per dollar, Paris’s move away from the US currency turned out to be very productive. 825 tons of the yellow metal is a large amount. Another ship carrying the same amount was on the way and that was only the beginning. By the end of 1965 there remained only about 800 million dollars of the $ 5.5 billion French foreign reserves in the US.

Of course, de Gaulle had not brought down the dollar alone. However, the French currency intervention had created a dangerous precedent for the US. Following the unpredictable move by France, zealous Germans pulled together to change dollars for gold bars. Their exchange was several times larger than the 1.5 billion dollars of France. Americans were shocked by this bold play but had to change the “greenbacks” for gold. Then the central banks of other countries – Canada, Japan – followed suit. The news about the US gold reserves at that time were like front-line reports on the battle field.

In March of 1968 the Americans limited the free exchange of dollars for gold for the first time. By the end of July, 1971 the US authorities declared the gold reserve of America had dropped to its lowest level – less than 10 billion dollars. This is when the “Nixon shock” happened. On August 15th, 1971 the US President Richard Nixon made a television appearance and announced the dollar would no longer be secured by gold.

Since that time the world currencies have been subjected to the principle of a financial pyramid without any checks
